Our modern pagan

Anent the happy day.

If you are looking for a wife who will be as pliable and responsive as clay in the potter's hands, you'll have to dig her up from foreign soil.

A lover is an indulgence; a husband a confirmed habit. Acquire only a good one.

167623

The woman who charmed you with her bright, vivacious wit may not be able to keep it up three hundred and sixty-five days in every year. You were a stimulant, but you've become a steady diet.

How beautiful is love! How perfect it seems with all its illusions, delusions and dreams!

is the Bride, all else beside Doth strangely take to flight;
The strains begin from Lohengrin,
And the world drops out of sight.
Her soul seems lost, till the gulf is crossed
That their two souls divide;
Old shoes and flowers and rice in showers
To earth recall the bride.

Don't marry a man thinking you can smooth him down or rub him up to your ideal. If he does not appear ideal to your blind love, better leave him to some one more blind.

You'll probably never be called upon to lay down your life for your wife, so you might as a tender substitute look pleasant, don your dress suit and accompany her to her club reception.

Don't be a valet to your husband.

is the Ceremony, long or short,
According to their longitude or creed;
The man is always bored,
By the maid it is adored,
And for both it fills a long-felt need.

Probably you intend your wife to have some money; it might be conducive to intelligent expenditure if she knew about the amount.

If you have a large and generous impulse, and wish to give your wife a present and are not sure what she would like, you had better give her some personal attention until the a b c's of her tastes and preferences are known to you.

If by any rare chance your husband is a good talker, you will shine best as a listener; if he isn't, give him an opportunity occasionally to practice.

Don't wear callous places all over your husband's tender heart by incessant demands upon his attention and sympathy.

Or Dakota or Divorce,
Or for Duty to each other
That insures the happier course.

Absence may make the heart grow fonder; presents have been known to have the same effect.

Don't be satisfied with just keeping the wife—keep her love, by about the same methods used in winning it.

Jenny Wren once said to her mate, "How loud and conspicuous Miss Lark is!" Johnny Wren strained his ear to catch her every twitter.

"How ridiculously fat Mrs. Robin has grown!" Johnny took admiring note of her curves.

"What a disgraceful flirt Miss Bluebird is!" Johnny returned her coy salute.

"What a terrible reputation Mrs. Blackbird is getting!" Johnny immediately investigated for himself.

is for Ever, as each fondly thinks
His love can never grow less;
And above in the blue
Is one star for the true
Who love but one love and that bless.

It's unwise to assume that your own gray spots will escape attention merely by painting the other fellow with black ones.

As long as man seeks his mate and proposes the union, lack of felicity impeaches only his judgment.

If you marry a sweet young maid of half your years with the idea of educating her to a similarity of tastes and companionableness for declining years, ten to one Cupid will start a rival kindergarten not far along your life's way.

Perfect frankness as to your financial standing will remove the temptation to secret expenditures for your own, and extravagant ones for your wife's pleasure.

Full measure of life and love, and
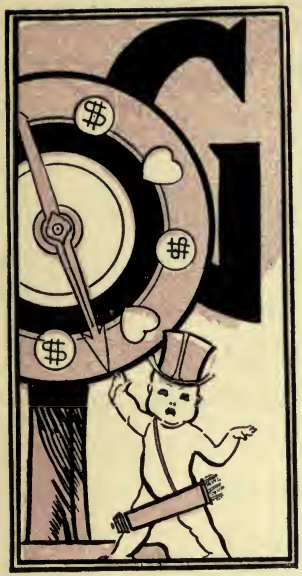
Faith till the story ends.

You may hope to influence your husband's politics, religion, business, but don't tamper with his pronunciation.

If the soul of the woman did not appeal to you, regardless of its covering of clothes or flesh, you deserve disappointment, and will doubtless get it.

You can make a selfish, inconsiderate, dissatisfied husband out of a perfectly kind and amiable man by performing menial services that any healthy, self-respecting man should do for himself.

To desire your wife's happiness amounts to mighty little, unless you are willing it shall be accomplished in her way.



is the Groom; to understand
The laws that govern a match,
You stand in a row all the men that you know,
And at leap-frog incite each back.
Your eyes tightly bind
Until you are blind—
Grab a frog and call it a catch.

A partnership of lives involves a sharing of liabilities as well as profits.

Clinging vines and business imbeciles are out of fashion as wives. A course in commercial law or social economy is a valuable matrimonial asset these days.

Two positive matrimonial opinions are apt to have a negative effect on harmony.

Before your marriage did it ever occur to you that your dressmaker's awful and ruinous blunders, or the rapid and unwarranted dissolution of the parlor rug, or the unsatisfactory method of tradespeople, or the exact location and condition of your corns, were just the sort of topics for a man's perpetual home entertainment?

Of words that have one soul—
Heaven, Home, and Happiness
All play a single role.

If you married your husband without compulsion, be his companion without reservation.

Even the promise to love, honor, and obey does not make imperative instant repetition of all your friends' little confidences.

A little love is a dangerous thing.

Use your best conversational powers occasionally at your own dinner table.

And the Union allows

Can your wife acquiesce in the following sentiment — "The married woman is the only one who is always sure of her beau"?

There are nagging women and profane men; it is hoped they will all marry each other.

Many a man has won a woman's love and later lost her respect. To keep the latter is always the finer and more vital accomplishment.

Few women admit half their physical suffering; be generous with your sympathy.

recalls the Jars and Jangles
Of the Joneses over the way,
And the countless family wrangles
Overheard most any day.
Do you shudder at the prospect?
Not a shudder; nor did they.
Are not you love's true elect?
Ah, no, just the same old clay!

A woman who appears at the breakfast table hideous in curl papers and sloppy wrappers must think she has married a blind man or a sand burr.

A woman can easily overdraw on her husband's sympathy; it is one of his short assets.

If you can act as your husband's cook, laundress, housekeeper, tailor, and barber, and still have time to keep abreast of his intellectual wants and pursuits, well and good; otherwise, sacrifice a few of the above to companionableness.

Try and discriminate between courtesy and caresses; the latter are as out of place in public as kimonos and carpet slippers.

Try and appear conscious that the domestic machinery is running smoothly before the opposite condition arrives.

The ceremony that made you a wife has no charm to keep your husband's love; that is done by your own personal charm.

Every self-respecting husband should have a private code known only to himself. On the way down town he makes the following memoranda: r s—, l k: p d q; and Brown, in the next seat, infers that Black is composing a cablegram to a Berlin banker, when he is only promising himself to pay the dog tax, leave his wife's gloves at the cleaner's, and be home promptly for dinner.

How did you entertain this man before your engagement? Try something similar after marriage.

ove takes a hand of each,

And never again
To that maid and man
Can life be as yesterday.

When you are married, be a good comrade, if it breaks every canon of your church and ancestry.

A man should be willing to use the same sort of ability in his position as head of the family that he does as head of a firm.

For a wife who whines, or a husband who sneers, there is no sort of marital salvation.

You and your wife and your checkbook should be a committee on finance that meets monthly with closed doors.

is for Money and Mothers-in-law,

And mentions each time for your sakes.

Of course, your wife has flowers every day if you smoke more than one El Sidelo.

When your husband seems willing that all the economy shall be at the home end, insist upon laundering his shirts yourself.

If you are morally, æsthetically and financially certain that your wife ought to enjoy a new Persian rug for your den more than a box for grand opera, don't be too confident of the charms of Persia.

Don't give your husband a back-comb for a birthday present.

The time for song and laughter;
For love and joy and deepest bliss,
For selfless thought and holiest kiss,
For kindly word and gentle way,
Forbearance, faith and courtesy,—
The time to dream of after.

Did you really have foremost in mind and at heart the woman's happiness when you married?

Tandems came in with some other foreign ideas; a span is rather more our American idea in matrimony as well as horses.

It is barely possible that you have a wife who would prefer a daily letter during your absence to some new bauble on your return.

Never ask your wife why she doesn't get a dress like Mrs. ——. Unless they are twins, the effect of following your suggestion will appall you and mortify her.

is for Optimism,
That leads you to believe
That two can make one;
May it ne'er take its leave!

Be entertaining to your husband, or some other woman will.

A woman may hold out and even wax stronger in spite of your financial failure or a deformity that overtakes you, but just sicken and die in the face of uncouth table manners.

A wise woman sometimes leaves her husband long enough to increase his appreciation, but not long enough for him to seek consolation.

Even matrimony does not preclude individual brushes and towels, and, occasionally, opinions.

is the general Public,
And the Public generally knows
About everything it shouldn't Except where to keep its nose.

Beat your wife in private, but don't mortify her in public.

A quail once said to her mate: "Bob, dear, do get home before sundown, and don't forget the wheat for breakfast and the milkweed down for the new nest, and match these blueberries at the upper corner bush, and some wool tags from the stony pasture fence, and—" and Bob White has gone without kissing her.

Don't always be talking of your husband's devotion. It makes less fortunate women hate you and the rest disbelieve you.

If you dislike her friends and she does not like yours, move into a boarding-house and then neither will have any.

begins the Quarrel

That was altogether his fault

If all admiration and interest shown by other men toward your wife is distasteful to you, why not insist upon her wearing a tin mask?

Adjust your mood to that of your mate, but don't ever expect him to reciprocate.

Possible shipwrecks make such interesting reminiscences if you only survive them. Do not rob your matrimonial voyage of all incident by jumping overboard in the first squall.

introduces Relatives
You never knew before;
And some bear a close resemblance
To the ancient scriptural poor.

If a man's people are distasteful to you, better not make them relatives, unless you contemplate the field of foreign missions.

If the sunshine of perfect frankness does not dispel the first misty misunderstanding, a London fog may gather.

The guests at your table should be chosen with a view of compensating your husband for much pleasant intercourse with men and women, otherwise sacrificed by his marriage.

When hand clasped hand

In the formula for matrimonial happiness, any satisfactory substitute for self-forgetting, self-effacing, self-sacrificing love has never been obtained.

Devotion of the genuine brand will make wrinkle remedies and rouge a drug on the market.

Every new home is a chemical laboratory that may run to explosives or spiritual radium.

If you want everything as your mother used to make it, you will, of course, be willing to imitate her father in the size of your vest, checks, etc.

If your assets are broad culture, and his are business integrity and capital, the ethical success of the partnership lies with you.

Not two wives in a thousand but what are absolutely true in thought and deed, but, being women, masculine attentions are dearer than myrrh and sweet incense. Give yours the best domestic article, and fear no foreign competition.

If you have managed to invest your husband with the infallibility of the Pope, don't force your opinion of him too persistently upon the general public; they may have met him before.

Do exactly the same qualities give you exactly the same pleasure after you have married them? Well, you were old enough to have known it.

Wear whatever your husband gives you, even if it is a candlestick for your back hair.

You shouldn't have married him unless you were willing to live in a dugout in Nebraska on salt mackerel and corn bread for the sake of living with him; and if such is the case, a shortage in the millinery allowance won't cause any domestic gloom.

You may be a regular Napoleon of finance and a modern Alexander in manipulating men, but try introducing a raw Swede girl to a coal range, the ice-box, the basement laundry, the attic bedroom and the electric bells and speaking-tubes—and then go into exile at Elba or Elmira.

Be sure that your husband carries each day the impression that he left at home that morning the most charming, cheery, freshly gowned woman in the city.

Unless you are especially favored with money, strength and the devotion of servants, some of the domestic traditions will have to be sacrificed, and it behooves you to decide early which shall have precedence — your husband's convenience, your own culture, or immaculate housekeeping. There are six possible variations of the order, but only one produces harmony.

If you selected your wife because of her style, don't growl when the styles change.

Having deprived your wife of all other legitimate male escort by marrying her, you can hardly in honor do less in that line than when the field was open to others.

If you have a quick temper, don't begin your first housekeeping in a flat—take a house with a coal and wood cellar and furnace. These furnish a means of working off any amount of indigestion, grouch and profanity.

Elevate your husband's sports by participating in them.

If you have married a man with sporting tendencies, don't expect him to cheerfully substitute a symphony concert for some Lou Dillon event.

Don't take all elasticity out of your husband's purse by keeping your hand in it.

No gentleman compels his wife to live in a blue haze of tobacco smoke or a conversational atmosphere laden with the rococco doings of his fellows.

When you can use railroad graders in your laboratory, cowboys for bank clerks, chimney-sweeps for bookkeepers, blacksmiths for stenographers, — then

The firm conviction held three hundred and sixty-four days in the year that you've said an extravagant number of fond, foolish things to your wife is more comfortable than the entertainment of genuine remorse for five minutes.

Your judgment may be good about selecting gowns, but if it is really good, you won't use it.
